| IMPROVISATION: THE ACTOR AT PLAY: This class focuses on the importance of play to the art of acting. It introduces the actor to his/her own inherent imagination and courage through theatre games and improvisational exercises, and creates a space in which to discover, embrace, exercise and strengthen true impulse and spontaneity. This course can prove invaluable for the acting student, but also for anyone who wishes to be a more engaged, fearless and creative human being. It is a valuable course for anyone who works collaboratively or engages in any form of public speaking. There are no prerequisites and no acting experience is required.. This is a 3.0 hour course-request it. | | | | | | | | |

English 225: Shakespeare: From Page to Stage As the course title suggests, we will be pursuing an approach to Shakespeare's plays that emphasizes the way we see and hear them as opposed to read them. We will be looking at stage practices during Shakespeare's time. How, on a bare stage, with no curtains or artificial lighting, was meaning communicated? We will also look at changing techniques of staging and acting over the centuries. There will be a heavy emphasis on modern film techniques as we look at clips from the earliest days of Hollywood cinema (think Max Reinhardt's 1935 A Midsummer Night's Dream set to Felix Mendelssohn's music) to today (Joss Whedon's on the fly filming of Much Ado About Nothing in 2012 with a group of friends at his California home during a break in work on The Avengers). Students will get a chance to block out scenes and perform as group a scene from one of our five plays as a final project and celebration of the term's work. No prior work in literature, film, or theater necessary. Plays will include: A Midsummer Night's Dream, Henry IV, Part I, Much Ado About Nothing, Hamlet and King Lear. Assignments include: daily journals and quizzes; a short, interpretative essay or an in-class essay; a group performance; and a final examination.

ENGL 345, "Remixing Modern American Identity": Over the course of the semester, we will consider some of the major works of 20th century American literary tradition in a variety of poetic and narrative forms and in diverse historical contexts. Students will gain an understanding of the different motivations and goals of creative artists in the U.S. and will track how certain ideas get "remixed" and reconsidered in American art and literature over time. An important goal of the course will be to consider how different kinds of texts "talk" to each other; accordingly, we will read novels, plays, and poetry while also examining films, visual art, and popular culture. Importantly, we will see how artists from different ethnic backgrounds and with contrasting artistic sensibilities come together to constitute the world of "American" literature. This multi-media course will emphasize analytical reading, critical writing, and interdisciplinary thinking. Artists under consideration will include: Toni Morrison, Flannery O'Connor, Junot Diaz, Sherman Alexie, William Faulkner, Cherrie Moraga, David Henry Hwang, and Jhumpa Lahiri.

In this class, you bring to light representations of children you think others need to consider. How have children been depicted in different times and places and media? Why are those difference important? We don't do drills and exercise; we create something new and original. The class time takes advantage of the longer Maymester class period to allow in-depth and hands-on research. We never sit in one place for long. We read central texts about what childhood means. We work in the archives, including own UNC library, a treasure house of material. Some material comes from North Carolina, but the sky's the limit. In this class, students have explored: books in which 19th-c children practiced their penmanship, adorned with doodles. Photos by kids who made names for themselves with their cameras. Books put out by a 1970s kitchen table collective in Chapel Hill. Students have created new knowledge through interviews; gone on to stage public exhibitions within their own communities; found new pathways for future study. You have the midterm/final questions from the first day. For the midterm, you consider a text from your research. For the final, you consider one of our shared readings. Your course project explains the idea about children that matter to you. This is a seminar in the true sense: your contributions make the class and shape what we can know. Come join us!

English 443: The Experience of Reading Melville's Moby-Dick In this course we will devote our time to an in-depth reading of Moby-Dick. For over a century critics and literary historians have canonized it as one of the great symbolic masterpieces. We will review the various major interpretations bestowed on it and work to develop our own sophisticated reading of its challenging structure and symbols. Tackling but a handful of chapters each day will allow us to consider the range and depth of Melville's manifold allusions and understand how he created its profound symbolic dimension. This course is intended for any serious readers, not just English majors. All that is required is a willingness to work slowly and carefully through one of this nation's greatest artistic achievements.

Silicon Valley is celebrated as a global capital of high-tech innovation and transformative economic development. Business leaders and politicians in other regions have attempted to reproduce that accomplishment, almost always with limited success. Why has the task been so difficult? What magic combination of institutions, public policy, people, and geography transformed the lettuce fields of Santa Clara County into the epicenter of a new knowledge economy? And what lessons can Silicon Valley teach us about the roles that government, universities, and private capital might play in inventing the future? These are the questions this course sets out to explore. We'll use the first week of class to immerse ourselves in the history of Silicon Valley. Then we'll spend a week in San Francisco and Palo Alto, where we'll visit with UNC alumni working in small start-ups, technology giants such as Google and Apple, and a number of venture capital and private equity firms. When we return to Chapel Hill, we'll use our last week to take the measure of what we've learned and to connect lessons from Silicon Valley to the challenges of economic development in North Carolina. Students enrolled in this course will pay a program fee of $1,275 directly to Honors Carolina. The fee will cover the cost of airport transfers, lodging at the Cardinal Hotel in downtown Palo Alto, and evening meals. It will not cover airfare, the cost of other meals, or incidental personal expenses. Enrollment is by permission of the instructor. Students
