Folklorists seek to understand how people interpret and make sense of the world. The study of folklore asks how, in a world flooded with commercial and highly refined cultural products, people use those particular materials that they themselves create and re-shape in order to express who they are, where they belong, and what they value. In this course we will look at diverse forms (or genres) of folklore, including song, architecture, legend, and food. We will consider how vernacular expressive culture is learned, what it does for people, and why these processes and products persist through time and space. Students will be introduced to the discipline of Folklore's central research methodology, ethnography, and have an opportunity to practice that approach in individual and group research projects.

Eligibility and Pre-requisites

Course is open to PhD and Masters-level students intending to prepare a research- focused dissertation or technical report on an aspect of water and sanitation. Undergraduate students are admissible at discretion of instructors (for first course in junior or senior year as appropriate).

The course is intensive and demanding upon both students and faculty, so enrollment is capped. Priority will be given to (a) students advised by collaborating faculty; (b) students with collaborating faculty on their committee; (c) other UNC-CH students engaged in water-related research

Contact Prof. Pete Kolsky for permission: pkolsky@unc.edu

Be sure to select 3.0 hours on the credit tab when enrolling.

AMST225. This Maymester, "The Ethics of Stand-Up Comedy" (Take 4) will explore the historical, sociocultural, and legal significance of twentieth and early twenty-first century stand-up comedy in the United States. First, we will study multiple theories of humor, the ethics of the creative process, and the role of the audience in comedic performances. Second, we will discuss how stand-up comedy helps us to better understand constraints on freedom of speech, possibilities for civil discourse, and notions of "political correctness" by examining public controversies and legal decisions related to issues like obscenity and hate speech. Finally, we will examine comedy albums as material culture and historically situated expressions of American humor, "eavesdropping" on vinyl technology to imagine how stand-up constructs, disrupts, and "records" American identities and communities. Our syllabus will include scholarly articles to guide our study, but we will focus on the works (and lives) of comedians such as Moms Mabley, Joan Rivers, Chris Rock, George Carlin, Daniel Tosh, Louis C.K., Richard Pryor, Mitch Hedberg, Margaret Cho, and Aziz Ansari, among many others.

This course explores the social history and culture of crime, deviant behavior, and punishment in America between the pre-Revolutionary period and the modern day. Using a variety of sources, including scholarly books and articles, works of literature, photography, journalism, legal texts, and more, we will trace the history of longstanding institutions; analyze the social dimensions of key moments in American legal history; inquire into the legal, social, and cultural experiences of multiple groups of people encountering the criminal justice system; consider evolving concepts relating to ordering society and confronting disorder; explore elements of American from a criminal justice perspective; and seek historical origins and continuities for contemporary problems. Along the way we will examine questions of inclusion and exclusion, motives for criminalizing or condemning certain behaviors in certain communities and not others, and think both broadly and specifically about the role of the law and its agents in the lives of Americans.
