ABOUT THE SEMINAR:
This course will examine hip hop's emergence in the US, and the proliferation of its practices and precepts to the far corners of the world through processes of cultural globalization, while focusing particularly on its manifestations on the African continent. In that context, the course will focus on ways that hip hop serves as a major conduit connecting African youth to global flows of information and sensibility, how it stimulates local, indigenous forms of musical expression and, particularly for young Africans, how hip hop functions as a medium for political discourse and activism. In this vein students will evaluate the role of hip hop in providing a space, a platform, and a voice to African youth for socialization, identity formation and community building in the current phase of cultural and economic globalization.

In exploring gender and sexuality in African societies, this course will focus on the lives and writings of six African women intellectuals, three of whom have received the Nobel Peace Prize. We will see how these women conceptualize and practice peaceful interactions and relationships with self and with others (both women and men) in order to bring about individual transformation as well as positive social change. We will reflect on how their lived ideals and realities can contribute to our understanding of peaceful relationships in the global community.

How do we define `blackness¿? Is it a physical trait, genetics, an African past, hair texture? Is it a common history of and resistance to slavery, racialized discrimination, and colonization? Is it the drum rhythm, the call-and-response poetry, the culture of improvisation? How has `blackness¿ been constructed and globally circulated through popular performance, literature, and artistic creativity? What connections are there between Senegalese rappers in France and the Gullah in Low-country regions of the U.S.? Or what connects the South African khoikhoi woman Sarah Baartmann (a.k.a. The Hottentot Venus) to the Harlem Renaissance and the King Kong musical of South Africa¿s Sophiatown, to filmmakers Ousmane Sémbene and Marlon Riggs, to Mardi Gras Indians and Nigerian pop star Fela Kuti, to the World Festival of Negro Arts and Bob Marley¿s ¿Africa Unite¿?

Through profound analysis of key aspects of black popular cultures in their global diversity, this course tackles fundamental questions about the meanings of black identity, identification, and belonging. First, it looks into how scholars have theorized race, blackness, Diaspora, and globalization. Then, using an interdisciplinary method, it explores how these concepts have been articulated in black popular cultures in different parts of the world.

The course is designed to give students a simulated experience of ethnographic fieldwork and qualitative research. Students are led through a learning experience where they will forge their own understanding of how a cross-section of Afro-Cubans, from different professional backgrounds and social spheres, are re-imaging political possibility in the contemporary moment when Cuba is ¿re-opening¿ for business. The Cuban state frames these reforms, greatly expanding the private sector since the collapse of the welfare state in the 1990s, as a much needed ¿update¿ (actualización) to the political economy of the Revolution. The incomplete realization of the state¿s promise of full racial equality within the Cuban Republic have led Afro-Cubans to navigate the present era of economic reform in ways that draw on prior legacies of black activism while charting new territory. Thus the course examines black activism in Cuba from historical and contemporary perspectives. How are Afro-Cubans mobilizing amidst the openings and limitations that have emerged in the new context of state-sponsored economic reforms and U.S.-Cuban rapprochement? To answer this central question, the course features a range of examples from Cuban society demonstrating a diversity of approaches. Situating the Cuban cases within ongoing Afrodescendant social movements in the Americas, we will explore how dynamics of race, gender, class, religion, and nation, shape strategies toward social change and visions of racial justice.

Gender and political economy of development in contemporary Africa

This seminar will explore scholarly debates in the field of international development studies (IDS) with a focus on gender issues. In efforts to contextualize contemporary development debates, the seminar will begin with an examination of dominant approaches to development and the rise of gendered perspectives in the field of IDS. Drawing on case studies from Southern Africa and other parts of the African continent, its second section will explore gendered dimensions of contemporary development issues, leading among them: food security; health and water issues; governance; post-conflict reconstruction; and economic policies.

STUDENTS ENROLLED IN THIS LECTURE ARE EXPECTED TO KEEP FRIDAY FROM 11:15 AM - 12:05 PM OPEN FOR THE WEEKS WHEN ALL SECTIONS WILL CONVENE TOGETHER AT THAT TIME.

Memory has long been studied in the academy as a psychological process of individual cognition. Over the past quarter century, however, notions of collective, public, and cultural memory have emerged as a useful means of understanding the complex ways that personal remembrances are enmeshed in larger patterns that inform our social belonging. This course examines the contested role of memory in constructing historical meaning and imagining the cultural boundaries of communities. We will examine a variety of symbolic and material expressions that Americans have developed over time to celebrate ethnic, regional, and national difference by exploring popular fictions, films, rituals, artifacts, holidays, monuments, landscapes, and performances. Problems we will examine include the invention of tradition; the politics of commemoration; emergent expression and counter-memory; and the cultural work and play performed by celebrity figures, sites of memory, national legends, and literary canons. We will approach these problems from a variety of disciplinary

This course provides an overview of the interdisciplinary methods of American Studies and contemporary approaches to the study of American society and culture, with an emphasis on literary works. In addition to a variety of short stories and essays and one or two novels that cover the span of the twentieth century, our examination of American life will center on four historical moments. In past semesters, we have covered such diverse subjects as the Spanish-American War and the U.S. occupation of the Philippines; representations of marriage and consensual governance in Hollywood zombie movies of the 1930s and 40s; the cultural impact of the Beat Generation and the commodification of ¿beatnik¿ culture; the AIDS epidemic and gay and lesbian political activism in the 1980s; and representations of globalization and new religious movements in late 20th century science fiction.

Why does history matter? It¿s not an easy question to answer, and to be honest, it probably doesn¿t matter to most people. But one important reason history is useful, at least, is because it helps us understand, if not avoid repeating, the present. Studying history reveals how small decisions become major forces, how humans and governments have wrestled with personal and political needs, how power ebbs and flows. In this course we will explore histories of the present, unpacking the historical context behind present-day issues, controversies, and events so as to understand them more deeply and impress our grandparents. You, the students, will choose which subjects we explore. For each of five units, I will assemble a group of readings that includes some basic contextual and historic matter; some original sources, such as manuscripts or newspaper coverage; some interpretive material created by historians; and some cultural material, such as art or television. These sources will help us explore core questions and concepts we will refine over the course of each unit.

AMST 203 introduces students to the fundamentals of American Indian and Indigenous Studies¿from theoretical orientations and source materials to research methodologies and means of reporting. The course begins with an exploration of the field¿s origins and evolution. Then, throughout the semester, we will learn about the approaches adopted by archaeologists, historians, anthropologists, literary scholars, and specialists in law. You will gain a critical introduction to the questions asked by individuals working in these fields and to the ¿raw materials¿ of their various ¿ways of knowing,¿ including ethnographic interviews, oral histories, archival materials, artifacts, maps, language, place, forms of expressive culture, and material objects. Still more exciting, you will be learning directly from the outstanding American Indian and Indigenous Studies faculty at the University of North Carolina and a few special guests. Rather than merely listening to others talk, however, you will also apply the insights and techniques about which you are learning in the context of a research project. This class is cross-listed with ANTH 203

AMST 211 001 3099 SOUTHERN STUDIES LITCULT Lecture 3 A
(Face to Face Instruction)

The American South resides where southern cultures are; it exists beyond geography or stereotype; it contains diverse cultures, ethnicities, and global influences. In this gateway course to the study of the American South, students examine southern cultural identity, recognizing the contributions of all its people, including people of American Indian, African, Latinx, Asian, and European descent. Students consider the region in all its complexity through a multi-disciplinary conversation about the American South that considers art, archaeology, architecture, cultural tourism, ecology, folklife, foodways, geography, history, language, literature, material culture, myth and manners, music, politics, religion, values, and more. Throughout the semester, students meet and work with scholars from our university community who study the region from a variety of disciplines and perspectives. The course exposes students to the unsurpassed resources of UNC¿s Southern Historical Collection, Southern Folklife Collection, the North Carolina Collection, and the Southern Oral History Program, as well as southern collections at UNC¿s Ackland Museum of Art, and other cultural and historical institutions in the region. Students are be encouraged to explore local cultural ¿repositories,¿ to taste the flavors of southern foodways, and to attend regional art happenings, lectures, literary readings, musical performances, and folklife events.

This course explores the multiple ways that American Indians navigated cultural, political, and economic changes in the twentieth century. Opening with assimilation policy in the 1880¿s and extending to contemporary struggles for autonomy, this course emphasizes the continuities of American Indian life ways and their adaptability to changing cultural and political landscapes. It will examine a number of important, interrelated questions. First, how have American Indian peoples maintained sovereignty as Native nations and autonomy as individuals in the shifting contexts of the twentieth century? How have federal policies shaped their lived experiences, and how have they responded to and resisted these policies? This course will approach these questions though historical texts, literature, and film. This course is cross-listed with History 235.

According to the Census Bureau, in the year 2020 "more than half of the nation's children are expected to be part of a minority race or ethnic group. All Americans under the age of 18 are now at the front of a trend that will see the overall population follow suit some 20 years later¿ (NPR's Hansi Lo Wang). In essence, we are in a time of a dynamic racial shift, and yet our country ¿ especially its southern part ¿ seems to be more divided or at least confused about what ¿race¿ is, how to talk about it and how it might intersect with other identity formations like gender, class, or sexuality. The first goal of this super course is to give students real tools for how to address multiple modes of difference. The second arc of this course is its focus on the southern hemisphere ¿ a site that is almost universality recognized as more and more important as we approach the mid-century mark. By understanding region and race, for example, students will not only enhance their understanding of the south, but also contribute a substantial body of scholarship to the state archives through group and individual projects (see below). We plan to be at the forefront of the discussion on the future of the U.S. south and its connections with sister states above and below the equator. This course examines American Indian art and material culture through interdisciplinary perspectives. Throughout the course students will gain a greater understanding of the role that the arts play in the social, cultural, and political life of Indigenous peoples. Throughout the semester, our examination will be guided by the following questions. How do art and material culture guide the representation of American Indians? How do Native people understand the meaning of the objects that they have created, used, and displayed over time? What is the role of objects in settings both within and outside of their nations and communities of origin? During the semester, we will examine how artists, novelists, historians, anthropologists, art historians and others have contributed to an interdisciplinary dialog about the material world. In addition to articles and book chapters we will read Native North American Art, by Janet C. Berlo and Ruth B. Phillips, Transformation and Continuity in Lakota Culture: The Collages of Arthur Amiotte, 1988-2014 by Arthur Amiotte, Abalone Tales: Collaborative Explorations of Sovereignty and Identity in Native California and The Painted Drum by Louise Erdrich.

This course examines the cultural history and meaning of food in America. We will explore how food shapes national, regional, and personal identity. We will consider how region, gender, ethnicity, class, race, religion, the media, global politics, and corporate America affect the food we eat. We will discuss food as both a source of healing and a source of conflict, and the ways in which it impacts community, from the American family to the `national family.¿

Students will examine a variety of sources including cookbooks, recipes, journalism, film, literature, art, photography, and artifacts to develop an understanding of food in American culture. This class is cross-listed with FOLK 375

For generations, American southerners have lived and worked in regionally distinctive worlds, filling these spaces and the landscapes that surround them with tools, furniture, outbuildings, and art inspired by folk, academic, and popular culture. These material settings evoke another time¿a pre-industrial South of ¿shotgun¿ houses, barns, cast iron skillets, pottery, dulcimers, quilts, and baskets¿where the power of place was unmistakable and oral traditions were passed down by families and neighbors. In the contemporary South, these traditional forms of material culture have simultaneously survived, disappeared, and evolved. Newer forms of material culture, including protest signs, food trucks, ¿McMansion¿ gated communities and suburbs, banking skyscrapers, and NASCAR souvenirs, have become an integral part of southern culture. This course explores the unique worlds of southern material culture and how ¿artifacts¿ from portraiture to porches to gain insight about the changing social and cultural history of the American South. *For 2011-12 this course counts in lieu of AMST 490 for the required capstone course for the Southern Studies concentration.

How often has art, music, or writing influenced the foundation of a space, individual, or practice? In this course we will investigate the colorful intersection between documenting your story and creating a movement. How can culture creators quickly adapt their practice to changing times, and support the evolution of collective consciousness, geared towards justice? Responding to the world involves a plethora of strategy which is often influenced by both our individual skill and target audience.
When creating art within politicized or otherwise sacred communities such as punk rock, hip-hop, activism, or spirituality (to name a few), an individual¿s chosen practice is often blurred behind their voice or political agenda. How can we, as creators of culture, honor our craftsmanship at the same level as we do our social and political goals? In Articles of Truth, students will respond to current events and historical facts through individualized multidisciplinary practices ranging from writing, visual art, performance, and publishing. How can a song, an illustration, a poem, or a photograph discuss the same ideology? How can they co-exist in either exhibition, collaboration, or a piece of art? Through pop-challenges, lectures, and the exploration of local art and movements, students will develop the voice and motive to create a final piece documenting truth via their chosen discipline.

This course begins with the methodological approaches students already bring to their research into American subjects and challenges them to broaden the ambit of their analysis to reveal new angles of exploration. What happens to a project when it is approached with inter-, trans-, or multi-disciplinary perspectives? The course readings will examine models of innovative scholarship, appraise the genre of the dissertation and its chapters, and practice different critical forms of inquiry, all while coming to a deeper understanding of their place within the history of American Studies.

"Folklorists seek to understand how people interpret and make sense of the world. The study of folklore asks how, in a world flooded with commercial and highly refined cultural products, people use those particular materials that they themselves create and re-shape in order to express who they are, where they belong, and what they value. In this course we will look at diverse forms (or ¿genres¿) of folklore, including song, architecture, legend, and food. We will consider how vernacular expressive culture is learned, what it does for people, and why these processes and products persist through time and space. Students will be introduced to the discipline of Folklore¿s central research methodology, ethnography, and have an opportunity to practice that approach in individual and group research projects."

This course is cross-listed with ENGL/ANTH 202.

Note: Students enrolling in FOLK 202-001 are also required to enroll in one recitation section numbered FOLK 202-601 through FOLK 202-604.

This course examines the cultural history and meaning of food in America. We will explore how food shapes national, regional, and personal identity. We will consider how region, gender, ethnicity, class, race, religion, the media, global politics, and corporate America affect the food we eat. We will discuss food as both a source of healing and a source of conflict, and the ways in which it impacts community, from the American family to the ¿national family.¿ Students will examine a variety of sources including cook books, recipes, journalism, film, literature, art, photography, and artifacts to develop an understanding of food in American culture. This class is cross-listed with AMST 375

Folklore is not a single, determinate object, but rather a category of cultural analysis and a way of looking at our cultural world. It was developed as part of the project of European Modernity and has had significantly different definitions and impacts in succeeding eras, with a distinctly progressive motivation for at least half a century. Indeed, the ¿problem¿ with folklore (in the sense of both a practical challenge and a fascinating intellectual question) is that folklore has been and often still is taken to stand for so many different, partially overlapping or even contradictory objects. What, then, might it mean or entail to study ¿folklore¿ in the 21st century? This course is designed to: ¿ Provide one relatively systematic overview of many of the major issues and perspectives that have characterized the study of folklore over two centuries. ¿ Require students to apply selected theories to bodies of data in order to understand the continuous process whereby theory illuminates data and data inform new theory. ¿ Model a way of thinking historically about the discipline, recognizing how definitions of the folk and folklore and consequent ideas about the social role of folklore and what questions one might productively ask of such material have emerged from the political and social developments of various periods. ¿ Challenge students to develop a form of folklore study that responds progressively to the realities of the global culture and the contentious and polarized political climate in which we now

ANTH 060H.001 | Crisis & Resilience: Past & Future of Human Societies
TR, 11:00-12:15. Instructor(s): Patricia McAnany. Enrollment = 24.
This FYS encourages students to adopt a long view of human societies by examining responses to crises engendered by political, economic, and environmental factors over the longue durée. Perspectives on societal change¿both apocalyptic and transformational¿are critically examined in light of a suite of case studies that reach back to Mesopotamia (3rd millennium B.C.), Classic Maya and U.S. Pueblo dwellers of the first millennium A.D. and also include more recent case studies, such as the Rwandan genocide, nations such as Haiti that are alleged to be ¿failed¿ states, and the current global crisis of environmental sustainability. Students gain familiarity with evaluating archaeological, historical, and environmental information that is pertinent to social change. The aim of the seminar is to foster critical thinking and the ability to evaluate narratives (in both scholarly and popular media) about societal crises and human resilience.
Seminar research materials include books, journal articles, films, and student-run interviews. Class meetings generally consist of a short, introductory

Instructor: Michael Shore / instructor permission is not needed for this class in Spring 2017

This class serves as a first introduction to the basic principles of geophysics as they apply to shallow earth structure with emphasis on archaeological problems. The course will emphasize the integrated use of seismic, gravity, magnetic, resistivity, electromagnetic, and remote sensing in order to image the subsurface, to locate shallow structures and to support the development of follow-on exploration, excavation, and engineering activities.

ANTH 490 047 5545 UNDERGRAD SEMINAR ANTHRO Lecture 3 A
(Face to Face Instruction)
Full Title: Planetary Life in the Anthropocene
Geologists have proposed that we now are living in the Anthropocene, a new planetary era shaped by the activities of humans. Key among those are the extraction of fossil fuels, the ever-increasing use of plastic, factory farming, acidification of the oceans, and human overpopulation. While the most familiar sign of the Anthropocene is climate change, its ramifications include the sixth major extinction of life forms in planetary history. How are differently situated humans responsible for and affected by these rapid alterations? What role do capitalism and consumerism play? How is the world being both unmade and made, and for what life forms? What can we do in response?

In addition to thinking together about these matters, this seminar introduces multi-species ethnography, which addresses how human life is bound up with other species and vice versa. Among topics we will consider are what we mean by invasive species and the conservation of biodiversity and, more broadly how to care for the earth and its many inhabitants.

Design thinking is a popular buzz term in this age of Kickstarter, instant turnaround, and short time-to-market. But what is design thinking really all about? In many ways, it is a process that most of us were quite familiar with in our preschool years. Observe an opportunity. Take an action. Assess the results. Laugh at the failures. Repeat. Design is not just for artists and engineers ¿ we are all designers!

But how do we get back to that pure form of design thought? In this class we will explore design through active making, discussion, presentation, and self-evaluation. Starting with the most basic of materials, we will exercise our latent creativity muscles and exorcise the constrained thinking and other obstacles engrained in us by ¿traditional¿ education. In this class, ¿failure¿ is an important concept that will be embraced and even celebrated. Science, entrepreneurship, and life itself is a process of try and try again. We must accept and learn from failure in order for ¿try¿ to become ¿do¿ and for ¿do¿ to lead to success.

Do you have an entrepreneurial idea and you would like to make a prototype to turn your idea into reality? Or do you want to experience the design and making process? In this class, you will go through this process for a semester-long project. The final outcome will be a prototype that meets an entrepreneurial need.

Students from any major are welcome to take this class. The pre-requisite is ECON 125, Introduction to Entrepreneurship. Orientation in the BeAM makerspace is also required.

You do not need to have an entrepreneurial idea before taking this class. You will work in groups to identify entrepreneurial ideas, which could emerge from discussions with people in the UNC community, local community, or around the country. From these ideas, you will choose a topic for your semester project, and then start working with your group on different designs, getting feedback throughout the process. By the end of the semester, you will fabricate a

Special Topics in Art History: Making Material Histories (Makerspace Integrated Course)

Clay, wood, cloth, glass, steel, and plastic. We interact with these materials every day, but rarely do we think about their properties and histories. This course explores the history and technology of materials and the ways they have impacted art, culture, and science. The course fully integrates historical scholarship and experiential making. Students engage both with the physical and chemical properties of materials through hands-on manipulation and fabrication at BeAM, studios, and laboratories across campus and study the historical and with theoretical debates surrounding material invention and use by artists, architects, scientists, and industries. How did the artisanal race to produce Asian porcelain in the eighteenth-century West impact the history of globalization? How did the wide adoption of plate glass in modern architecture alter social relations in the built environment? How will 3D printing

ARTH 950: Professional Development Seminar

This course focuses your attention on the variety of ways in which scholars in art history disseminate their research and market themselves. In it we will analyze various methods of writing in art history, from abstracts to conference papers, from journal articles to grant applications. We will discuss oral presentations, from conference presentations to museum gallery talks, and consider moving through the job application process. Students will engage with each of the various genres through weekly exercises, but will focus on one specific genre, appropriate to your stage in the graduate program, for their semester-long project. This course is most appropriate for students in their second year of study or beyond.

ARTH 956: Arts of Umayyad Córdoba

This seminar focuses on the Umayyad dynasty of Córdoba in present-day Spain, which ruled the early Islamic Iberian Peninsula (known in Arabic as al-Andalus) from 756-1031. The Cordoban Umayyads were one of the four great caliphates of the early medieval period of Islamic civilization, and the only one to rule from Europe. Their monuments, notably the Great Mosque of Córdoba and the royal city of Madinat al-Zahra¿, and the luxury objects made for women and men of the court, are among the most celebrated in the history of Islamic arts. Readings will introduce the critical historiography of Islamic art history and the caliphal era, providing the historical and critical frameworks for our exploration of Umayyad Córdoba in its Islamic and European contexts.

ARTH 957 Seminar in African Art
¿Art and Craft: Deploying classifications across cultures¿

This seminar explores a key designation used to define visual culture and, significantly, cultures as a whole: Art or Craft, and Artist or Artisan. These terms have carried varied associations across time. They are rooted in Western forms of cultural and art historical analysis, though they have been widely adapted in cultures around the world, where they are absorbed into the analysis of new sets of objects and practices. They have often been used to create or enforce hierarchies, and the boundaries between the categories have been policed to protect the boundaries of Art. Yet, these boundaries have often been blurred; artistic genres and artists move ¿up¿ from craft to art, or reverse this trajectory, according to the priorities of the critics and the art markets in which they circulate. These shifts may occur for entire cultures, as canonical art history encompasses many non-Western forms that were previously excluded, as craft or, a related term, as artifact.

ARTH 982: Seminar in American Art: Media and Materiality

This is a course about matter. At one end of our spectrum of interrogation will be material culture, from artistic masterpieces to mundane, everyday goods. How do objects embody cultural, social, or psychological systems? What modes of exchange do they facilitate or hinder? At the other end of our spectrum is media, which we often assume to be abstract and immaterial. This course will attempt to make visible the materiality of intangible networks and interrogate the objecthood of technologies. By are the physical routes and actual spaces inhabited by the digital? How do symbolic operations like writing or counting migrate across materials and techniques to generate cultural meaning?

Studies of materiality, or the agency of matter, has challenged the anthropocentric legacy of many academic disciplines, but many recent theoretical interventions also tend to be untethered from actual artifacts. This course will explore an interdisciplinary set of ideas emerging from thing theory, new

Course Topic: Movie Making Machines: Learning About Cinema in the Maker Space

Though we generally think of movies as the result of the work of screenwriters, cinematographers, actors, and directors, movies are also the product of a range of scientific and technological concepts and innovations. The magic of the movies begins with the technologies that make moving images possible. This projects-based seminar will introduce students to the fundamental optical and technological principles of motion pictures. By using the Maker Space to design and fabricate cameras, lenses, film strips, and movie projectors, students will gain a deep understanding of the material and technological foundations of the cinema, and the operating principles that are behind not only the classic films of Hollywood¿s past, but the high-definition digital imaging technologies of the present.

Over the semester, students will learn about the history and science of early cinema through lectures and readings while delving into the principles of

BIOL 201 609 16245 ECOLOGY AND EVOLUTION Recitation 4 A
(Face to Face Instruction)

Unlike most recitations in Biology classes at UNC, BIOL 201 professors Dr. Evans and Dr Burch will be teaching this recitation. You can expect this recitation (restricted to first year students with less than 30 hours of credit ONLY) to engage in the same exercises as the other 201 recitation sections, but also we will focus greater attention on study habits, learning goals, and test taking strategies.
First year students with less than 30 hours of credit ONLY. Permission of the instructor required. Email Dr Burch & Dr Evans with your PID number to request this specialized recitation for BIOL 201.

WAIT LISTING FOR SPRING 2018 HONORS COURSES HAS BEEN SUSPENDED. WAIT LISTS WILL BE PURGED ON FRIDAY, JANUARY 5. BEGINNING MONDAY, JANUARY 8, YOU MUST OBTAIN WRITTEN INSTRUCTOR PERMISSION FOR ANY HONORS COURSE YOU WISH TO JOIN. YOU ARE REQUIRED TO DELIVER A HARD-COPY OF THE PERMISSION NOTE TO THE HONORS CAROLINA OFFICE IN 225 GRAHAM MEMORIAL.
The content of this course will be essentially the same as that of a regular section of Biology 202. We will discuss the structure and function of nucleic acids as well as the principles of inheritance, gene expression, and genetic engineering. There will be four lecture/discussion hours per week with special emphasis on class discussion. In addition to two mid-term exams and the final exam, there will be one significant writing assignment and one small group project during the semester. The required text for this course will be Introduction to Genetic Analysis (9th edition) by Griffiths et al. There is likely to be additional assigned reading from the primary literature. Students who have taken or are currently taking organic chemistry will be particularly well prepared for this course.

PREREQUISITE: BIOL 101 AND CHEM 101 OR 102 WITH A GRADE OF C OR BETTER.

WAIT LISTING FOR SPRING 2018 HONORS COURSES HAS BEEN SUSPENDED. WAIT LISTS WILL BE PURGED ON FRIDAY, JANUARY 5. BEGINNING MONDAY, JANUARY 8, YOU MUST OBTAIN WRITTEN INSTRUCTOR PERMISSION FOR ANY HONORS COURSE YOU WISH TO JOIN. YOU ARE REQUIRED TO DELIVER A HARD-COPY OF THE PERMISSION NOTE TO THE HONORS CAROLINA OFFICE IN 225 GRAHAM MEMORIAL.
BIOL 205H Cellular and Developmental Biology is an Honors course that covers the fundamentals of cell structure and activity in relation to special functions, metabolism, reproduction, embryogenesis, and post-embryonic development, with an introduction to the experimental analysis of cell physiology and development. The material that we present will mirror what is presented in non-honors sections, plus we will use some class periods for hands-on enrichment activities and discussions. These activities are designed to give you experiences related to the course topics, and to give you time to interact informally with the instructors and with each other.

PREREQUISITE: BIOL 202.

Bob Goldstein's lab focuses on discovering fundamental mechanisms in cell and developmental biology. We ask questions about how cells work during development, questions that are relevant both to basic biology and to human health: How do cells divide in the right orientation? How do certain components

BIOL 395H 001 2537 UNDERGRADUATE BIOLOGY RESEARCH Lecture 1 - 3 A
(Face to Face Instruction)

The purpose of BIOL 395H is to provide honors students with independent research experience, while working in a research lab on a question of current biological interest. Under the supervision of a faculty member, and with contribution of research postdoctoral fellows, students will learn more than just basic research techniques. They will learn how to start to think as scientists, raising hypotheses and finding ways to test them in an empirical manner. In addition to the research performed in the lab, honors students will meet with each other on a weekly basis, discuss their research and develop their scientific thinking through reading and discussing primary scientific literature.

FOR BIOLOGY MAJORS ONLY. PREVIOUS ENROLLMENT IN BIOL 201 OR 202 REQUIRED. DEPARTMENT OF BIOLOGY PERMISSION REQUIRED; APPLICATION AVAILABLE IN 213 COKER HALL.

BIOL 395H may be taken for no more than six graded academic credits. Three to five credit hours of research may be counted as one lecture course toward

Our objective in the Honors Section of Biology 565 (Conservation Biology) is to take the course material from the Biology 565 lectures and find new, interactive, and collaborative ways to explore and learn about 've examined and dissected the biological science embedded, unseen, in contemporary events and news stories. We've applied course topics to North Carolina environmental problems. We've devised original games that are based on course material, including predicting the future of endangered species populations and community decision making about conservation issues. We've invited in practitioners in the field for guest lectures with particular reference to what their day-to-day jobs are like, how they found their way to particular careers, and how students can approach the job market and careers in conservation science. But we will design our objectives, methods, and schedule together as a class early in the semester.

PREREQUISITE: BIOL 201.

Prerequisites: BMME 160 and BMME 351. This course will target upper level undergraduate and entry level graduate students. The course will 1) introduce basic neuroscience topics underlying sensorimotor control, and 2) introduce different types of childhood and adult neuromuscular disorders with both central and peripheral origins. The main focus of the class will be on the different techniques used for diagnosis, assessment, and rehabilitation interventions. Students should register for 3 credit hours for this course

Prerequisites: BIOL 202
This course will target upper level undergraduate and entry level graduate students. The course will introduce the concept of using engineering principles to modify cells in applications such as drug delivery and cellular therapy. The goals of the course are to 1) discuss genome editing technologies, 2) evaluate strategies for directed differentiaiton of stem cells, and 3) illustrate how cells can be applied to bioprocess engineering. Students should register for 3 credit hours for this course.

ABOUT THE SEMINAR:
Science as presented in the mass media is often shallow and misleading. Critical evaluation of news reports and claims by politicians, although daunting for the non-scientist, is not difficult if a few basic principles are applied. The underlying theme of this seminar is the development of the basic tools for

CHEM 241H.001 | Modern Analytical Methods for Separation and Characterization
TR, 11:00-12:15. Instructor(s): James Jorgenson. Enrollment = 25.
Acid-base equilibria and titrations, electrochemistry, atomic and molecular spectroscopy, mass spectroscopy, chromatographic and electrophoretic separation methods.

PREREQUITE: CHEM 102H. DEPARTMENT OF CHEMISTRY CONSENT REQURIED.

Prof. Jorgenson received his B.S. in Chemistry at Northern Illinois University in 1974 and Ph.D. in Analytical Chemistry at Indiana University in 1979. He joined the faculty at UNC in 1979 and is currently a William Rand Kenan, Jr. Distinguished Professor of Chemistry. He was Chair of the Chemistry Department from 2000 to 2005. Among the honors he has received are the Esselen Award for Chemistry in the Public Interest (2004), the American Chemical Society Award

In the honors anlaytical methods lab students will use chromatographic, spectroscopic, and electrochemical methods to carry out a real world analysis. Students will work with real world samples throughout the semester and the lab course will emphasize group work. A portion of the lab will involve a group research project. Groups will be given a problem to solve and the time to design their own experiments, run their experiments, collect data, and give a poster presentation on their group research project. What is great about the group research is that each group decides on their own direction, what techniques they wish to use, and need to use, to solve a particular analysis problem.

PREREQUISITE: CHEM 101/101L AND 102/102L.

Chemical Biology. 3 Credits.

Application of chemical principles and tools to study and manipulate biological systems; in-depth exploration of examples from the contemporary literature. Topics include new designs for the genetic code, drug design, chemical arrays, single molecule experiments, laboratory-based evolution, chemical sensors, and synthetic biology.
Requisites: Prerequisite, CHEM 430.

CHEM 430H.001 | Intro to Biochemistry
TR, 11:00-12:15. Instructor(s): Brian Hogan. Enrollment = 30.
Dynamic examination of the principles of biochemistry, from macromolecules through enzyme function and catalysis, and into the primary metabolic pathways that create cellular energy. This course will be an interactive combination of lecture-type materials along with presentations from students and deeper dives into topics of mutual interest to course participants. The goal of the course is to provide a detailed foundation in biochemistry and to teach critical thinking skills focused on understanding and challenging primary biochemical data. Students who enroll in this course are typically heading to graduate or professional school in this area of study, or will use the principles employed to enhance their problem-solving abilities.
Chemistry 430H is designed for chemistry majors and is not cross-listed with biol 430. Hence, Chemistry majors in the honors program will have priority. Seats will open as follows: Chemistry majors in honors with senior status, Chemistry majors in honors with junior status, Chemistry majors BS-Biochem, Chemistry majors BA. Any additional seats (and there usually are very limited

CLAS 263H.001 | Athletics in the Greek and Roman World
TR, 03:30-04:45. Instructor(s): Alexander Duncan. Enrollment = 24.
Today and in antiquity, to talk about sport is to talk about society. This course will inspect the cultures of Greece and Rome, from the age of Homer to the end of the (Western) Roman Empire, through the lens of athletics. We will scrutinize the mechanics and logistics of ancient athletic events and take up larger questions of interpretation, considering sport within its religious, cultural, and political contexts. Adopting and adapting an extensive battery of theoretical approaches¿economic, anthropological, poetic, political, sociological, kinesthetic, etc.¿we will address questions such as the following: How do the ideals embodied in Greek and Roman sport relate to the myths and cultural practices of these societies? How were competitors, whether amateur and professional, rewarded and regarded by their societies? What ethical dilemmas did athletes face? Why were animals, slaves, religious minorities subjected to blood-sport in Roman amphitheaters, and why did others volunteer to face the same fate? What legacies and lessons have ancient athletics left for the modern world?

Course Topic: Social Media

This class examines the relationship between society and the current crop of computer-mediated communication technologies known as "social media", including Facebook, Twitter, Snapchat, Instagram, and more. These technologies are often regarded with fear or awe; the purpose of this class is to break down the mythologies of social media and develop methods of analysis and critical understanding. To do this, we will draw from a broad range of social theory including science and technology studies (STS), communication theory, linguistics, cultural studies, and media anthropology to critically evaluate the impact of social media on relationships, activism, branding, politics, news media, and identity. We will focus on the sociotechnical, the relationship between the technical affordances of a website/technology and the social norms of a user community, and how to use this to understand emerging technologies

(and social media that doesn't exist yet!).

Course Topic: The Dark Side of Interpersonal Communication

The "dark side" of communication is a metaphor intended to describe the study of disruptive, dysfunctional, distorted, distressing, and destructive aspects of human communication and the direct and indirect effects of human exploitation. This course explores the dark side of communication - the side that allows us to lie, cheat, exploit, objectify, misguide, resist, stigmatize, judge, reject and exclude. Along the way, it provides the opportunity to explore a variety of theoretical perspectives and apply them to the everyday problems we face in our interpersonal encounters. A sample of topics discussed throughout the course include: deviants, rebels, outsiders, ostracism, exile, peer rejection, social judgments, surveillance and policing, stigma, alienation and loneliness, conformity, group think, deceit, gossip, secrets, revenge and abuse.

Course Topic: Writing the Podcast Drama

Fifty-seven million Americans listen to podcasts on a monthly basis. Industry analysts expect programming for the podcast format to rise from six billion listener hours in 2013 to around fifteen billion listener hours by the end of 2020. In Writing the Podcast Drama, students learn how to go from an idea to a serialized dramatic podcast. Creating an original series of their own, students explore the ways writers develop cliffhangers, tension, conflict and suspense within an episode and how writers sustain it throughout the development of a series. Techniques specific to writing for the audio medium are also explored from sound effects to the use of music with regards to creating suspense and establishing setting. Students gain insight into this burgeoning industry from Howard Craft, creator of the first dramatic African American Super Hero Podcast, The Jade City Chronicles which is currently in development with a release date set for the spring of 2017. Craft is also the creator of audio drama, The Jade City Pharaoh now its third season on WUNC, and is the Department of Communication Piller Visiting Professor of Practice for 2016-17.

Course Topic: US-Third World Feminism and Its Film and Media

Course Description: This course looks at the multiple forms of scholarship, intervention, critique, and archives employed by "U.S. - Third World Feminists" of the late 1970s-1990s. These feminists took to film, media, poetry, small press publishing, conferences, and performance actions to create a feminism that gave us intersectionality. We will work through the relationship between their creative work and theoretical work in a way that does not reduce it to a distinction between "theory and praxis" by asking: how does art help us envision a movement?

There is a Monday afternoon screening for this course.

Detailed course description:
The purpose of Hate Speech is to expose students to the nature of hate in American life. As we attempt to understand the essential qualities of hate we will learn that hate is made possible through communication (sometimes in the form of hate speech) and human perception (sometimes in the forms of stereotypes and bias). We will learn that hatred is sustained through the imposition of racist, sexist, and heterosexist ideologies that privilege Whiteness, maleness, and heterosexuality. Sometimes these ideologies are explicitly understood by the people who use them. Sometimes these ideologies and the assumptions underlying them are only implicitly understood and we may be relatively unaware of their influence.

We will also learn that hate may also be resisted through communication. Students will learn how communication may serve to teach respect and tolerance,

This course is designed to provide a structured environment, instructor and peer feedback, along with production & postproduction resources in which to complete an advanced near-to-graduation media project. The project can be in narrative, documentary, experimental, or interactive, with a running time for videos of no longer than 20 minutes. The course assumes the student has already taken a fair number of the post-COMM 230 production courses offered in the department.
Seniors only.
This course has classification (class year) restrictions.
Permission of instructor for nonmajors.
A capstone course for seniors who are on the COMM Media Production track, and who have completed significant preparatory coursework. COMM 230 and at least one 500-600 level production course are required. Interested students must apply in the Fall with a project to be considered for enrollment. Students in the course will complete an advanced media project in narrative, documentary, experimental, multi-media or audio.

Detailed course description:
The stuff of media culture today - from rap to apps - circulates within commercial markets that are often trans- and inter-national (if seldom "global" in any literal sense); and the production, distribution and consumption of popular culture (e.g., rap) and media technology (i.e., apps) seldom occur anymore within one nation, or even region of the world. In this course we will study media forms, content and cultures, moving across borders both official and de facto. Our primary subjects will be popular culture, media technology and the people who produce and consume them. Our guiding questions will be organized around the relationships of each to commerce and social change.

Critical-cultural and political-economic methods of analysis will be taught. Case studies will focus on the film, music, fashion, social media and consumer
Prerequisite: COMM 140 or equivalent

From watching mainstream media we are familiar with the dominant conventions of film and video. There is also a lesser-known body of work that radically challenges these conventions. This work can be compelling, disturbing, confrontational, provocative, frustrating, and inspiring. Experimental Video will explore this alternative media by viewing a mix of classic and contemporary work, by reading essays that interpret, theorize on, and give the history of

In this course students will learn a wide range of post-production techniques for video projects, using primarily After Effects (and Photoshop, to a lesser extent). Topics explored include: Compositing, that is to say the integration and collage-ing of multiple video/film/still/text layers. Motion Graphics deals with the movement through 2D and 3D screen space of these layers, and Visual Effects will consider the myriad ways one can distort, color manipulate, and modify these layers, or create such phenomena as smoke, rain, etc. Besides creating projects using these techniques, we will also screen and analyze how this form of image manipulation is used in television and motion pictures.

Course Topic: Movie Making Machines: Learning About Cinema in the Maker Space

Though we generally think of movies as the result of the work of screenwriters, cinematographers, actors, and directors, movies are also the product of a range of scientific and technological concepts and innovations. The magic of the movies begins with the technologies that make moving images possible. This projects-based seminar will introduce students to the fundamental optical and technological principles of motion pictures. By using the Maker Space to design and fabricate cameras, lenses, film strips, and movie projectors, students will gain a deep understanding of the material and technological foundations of the cinema, and the operating principles that are behind not only the classic films of Hollywood¿s past, but the high-definition digital imaging technologies of the present.

Over the semester, students will learn about the history and science of early cinema through lectures and readings while delving into the principles of

This course will be a collective investigation into the overlaps, continuities, and shared languages of Performance Art and Activism in the Américas. We will look into the political imperatives of much of performance art from the Américas, from artists like Ana Mendieta, Regina Galindo, Lotty Rosenfeld to understand the historical forces animating their work. Alongside this repertoire of performance art, we will take up the performative dimensions of activist and social movements across the Americas as it manifests in direct action, organizing strategy, and research practices. We¿ll think and feel through the uses of the performative in activist actions like the round dances and flash mobs of Canada¿s Idle No More, the virtual and concrete "pos me salto" movement in Mexico City, and the Polling for Justice project in New York City. Working through these two different repertoires and archives of work we will think through the shared and divergent investments in bodies, embodiment, space, and gesture in articulating varied politics. We will examine these politics through four primary rubrics of: fugitivity, decoloniality, sovereignty, and insurgency.

The course will be hemispheric in approach, and we will think through shared but variegated histories of what decolonial theorists Quijano and Wallerstein

This course is a complement to Comm 811 (Rhetorical Criticism). The two may be taken in any order, but in order to get a fulsome understanding of traditions, issues, and practices of critical work, both are recommended. This course focuses on the practice--the doing of--criticism. Critical research and writing compose an extraordinarily complex academic genre that brings together three or more requirements of research and modes of writing. At the very least, criticism incorporates theory, socio-political, spatial-temporal contexts, and critical ¿targets¿ (discourses, practices, objects, events). The arguments that compose criticism are typically "thick" with evidence as well as with theoretical and contextual warrants. The ¿right¿ balance of those elements is partly a matter of critical norms that change over time, but it is even more heavily dependent upon the particular project and the questions posed by it. In the course, we will analyze the constructions of several critical arguments, work through our own critical targets by bringing them into contact with various mid-range theoretical concepts, and bring a final critical project to fruition. The latter should be of a quality that would make at least a good conference submission, if not also (with revision) a publication submission.

Course Topic: Work, Power, and Resistance

This course will examine work as a principal site of struggle in contemporary society. Focusing mainly on scholarship from the 1970s to the present, we will explore various efforts to theorize and empirically examine how work functions as a focal point of contestation between capital and labor. Beginning with Harry Braverman's classic Marxist analysis, Labor and Monopoly Capital, we will explore debates that emerged in the wake of this work under the body of research referred to as "Labor Process Theory." Much of this work moved beyond Braverman's structural analysis to focus on the subjective experience of work "at the point of production." Writers such as Michael Burawoy, Paul Thompson, Stephen Ackroyd, David Knights, and Hugh Willmott, amongst others, have explored possibilities for theorizing the ways in which work, control, resistance, meaning, and identity, intersect in organizing processes.

Once we have explored the labor process theory debates, we will move on to consider developments in efforts to theorize the shift from Fordist to

This class will examine feminist theories of technology and read a number of example studies that use feminist principles, methodologies, and praxis. While ¿technology¿ is writ large, the class will focus on media and digital technologies. We will take an intersectional approach to feminism, using gender not as a primary lens but as one alongside class, gender, sexuality, and ability (among others) to examine how researchers de-center hegemonic perspectives when investigating technology. To that end, we will read ethnographic and historical accounts of various technologies and discuss a variety of projects¿some successful, others less so¿that involve queer, postcolonial and feminist approaches to design and deployment. This class draws from feminist philosophy of technology, human-computer interaction (HCI), science and technology studies, material culture and internet studies, among others.

Course topic: Buff and Polish

The objective of this seminar/practicum is to provide students with an orientation to the process of finding employment in an academic setting, and to provide students with opportunities to develop the materials necessary to assist in that effort. While the focus is primarily on entry-level academic positions, such as Assistant Professor, materials developed as part of the course are applicable to applying for post-doctoral fellowships, "ABD" positions, and work in other settings (eg. governmental) requiring a Ph.D.

COMP 380H.001 | Introduction to Digital Culture
TR, 02:00-03:15. Instructor(s): Tessa Joseph-Nicholas. Enrollment = 20.
This course examines the nature, function, and effects of the Internet and Internet use in the context of an extended study of its history, considering key technologies, concepts, ideas, innovators, and historical and sociocultural influences. Significant reading, writing, research, and beginner-friendly, code-light web development and data science components. No previous programming or technical experience is required. This course is suitable for both CS majors and nonmajors.

Tessa Joseph-Nicholas (http://tessa.web.unc.edu) is the Director of Digital Arts and Humanities Projects and a Senior Lecturer at the Department of Computer Science at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. She holds an MFA in Creative Writing from Cornell University and a PhD in American literature and poetics from UNC-Chapel Hill. She is a co-recipient of a two-year Innovation Grant from UNC's Institute for the Arts and Humanities for the project WAIT LISTING FOR SPRING 2018 HONORS COURSES HAS BEEN SUSPENDED. Enroll in COMP 585 First.  Students wanting to be in the Honors section will be moved the first week of class.

COMP 585H.001 | Serious Games
MW, 03:35-04:50. Instructor(s): Diane Pozefsky. Enrollment = 15.
COMP 585H is taught in conjunction of COMP 585: that is, it is a single set of lectures that all students will attend. In addition, COMP 585H students will attend an additional hour class and have an additional project separate from the class assignment. The additional lectures will be given by the instructor or other faculty members who are working in areas of interest. As appropriate, outside speakers will also be brought in. The additional topics and projects will be built around the specific interests of the students but will include more in depth development and design of topics taught in COMP 585. Possible topics include techniques for adapting the difficulty of a game to a player¿s achievements or topics of current research within the department such as advanced simulations of human behavior, sound simulation or use of devices such as Oculus Rift or Google Glass. COMP 585H students may work in teams or

DRAM 285H.001 | Goodbye Yellow Brick Road: Modern British Drama
MWF, 10:10-11:00. Instructor(s): Greg Kable. Enrollment = 24.
This class offers a survey of British drama and theatre practice from the late 1890s to the present. We will analyze texts, screen videos, engage in critical writing and thinking, and explore performance, all of which are intended to enhance your understanding and appreciation of this foundational period in dramatic history. While our treatment is necessarily selective rather than comprehensive, we will attempt a reasonable amount of depth in the course of our journey. We will consider plays in terms of both text and performance: that is, as literature or cultural artifacts, but also as blueprints for action in the theatre. Each work we study is remarkably different, and will give you perspectives on the variety of English drama from the late nineteenth into the early twenty-first century. Approach them all with an open mind and an open heart. And, Anglophile, welcome to the class.

Gregory Kable is a Senior Lecturer in the Department of Dramatic Art, where he teaches dramatic literature, theatre history, and performance courses and WAIT LISTING FOR SPRING 2018 HONORS COURSES HAS BEEN SUSPENDED. WAIT LISTS WILL BE PURGED ON FRIDAY, JANUARY 5. BEGINNING MONDAY, JANUARY 8, YOU MUST OBTAIN WRITTEN INSTRUCTOR PERMISSION FOR ANY HONORS COURSE YOU WISH TO JOIN. YOU ARE REQUIRED TO DELIVER A HARD-COPY OF THE PERMISSION NOTE TO THE HONORS CAROLINA OFFICE IN 225 GRAHAM MEMORIAL.

DRAM 475H.001 | Costume History: Africa, Asia, and Arabia
TR/R, 12:30-01:45/04:00-05:00. Instructor(s): Bobbi Owen. Enrollment = 10.
The course considers traditional garments worn in Africa, Asia, and on the Arabian Peninsula. Specific peoples considered vary from semester to semester. Class format for 12:30-01:45 is mainly lecture accompanied by numerous illustrations. Students who participate in the Honors section will also meet on Thursday afternoon from 4-5 pm and consider the ways in which ethnicity in dress is re-interpreted and/or mis-interpreted by Hollywood. Each week, a different film, such as Rock the Kasbah, Mulan, or Memoirs of a Geisha, will be the focus.

Costume design and costume history, based in Western and non-Western traditions, form the basis of my teaching, with a first-year seminar occasionally added to the mix. I write about theatrical designers with books including Costume Design on Broadway and Broadway Design Roster, the catalog for the United States

In this course we will explore some of the major texts from 19th- and 20th-century world literature. We will apply techniques of literary analysis to a body of translated international texts, considering how themes of apocalypse and transformation operate on both a personal and global scale. Our journey will take us through major literary periods, such as Romanticism, Realism, and Modernism, and in so doing we will attend to developments in history, the arts, and philosophy over these centuries. Texts will include Mary Shelley¿s Frankenstein, Fyodor Dostoevsky¿s Notes from Underground, Gustave Flaubert¿s Madame Bovary, Arthur Rimbaud¿s A Season in Hell, Virginia Woolf¿s To the Lighthouse, Rainer Maria Rilke¿s The Notebooks of Malte Laurids Brigge, Federico Garcia Lorca¿s Poet in New York, Franz Kafka¿s The Trial, Jorge-Luis Borges¿ Labyrinths, Ralph Ellison¿s Invisible Man, and Clarice Lispector¿s The Hour of the Star.

This course surveys the visual arts, in particular painting and photography, from roughly 1750 to the present. Pictorial traditions, styles, and genres (as well as the traditions of critical writing that respond to them) will be considered from a proto-cinematic perspective. Theater and the novel may also be examined comparatively.

This course will take you on a journey through film history from the silent era to the present. We will closely examine some of the most groundbreaking and influential film movements such as German expressionism; Soviet montage; French surrealism and impressionism; film noir and melodrama in classical Hollywood; Italian neorealism; ¿new waves¿ across post-World War II Europe and beyond. We will also analyze politically militant films of Latin America and Sub-Saharan Africa; Bollywood musicals; transnational blockbusters; East Asian martial arts genres; and more. Join us for a study of these traditions and contexts, with an eye to their aesthetic, cultural and political connections.
Assignments include three short papers, a midterm exam, and final exam.
This course satisfies both the Visual & Performing Arts (VP) and the Global Issues (GL) general education requirements.
It also counts toward the Global Cinema Minor and the Global Cinema Studies Major Track within Comparative Literature.

Introduction to Film Theory: Melodrama

Introduces students to debates in classical and post-classical film theory via one of cinema's oldest and most prolific genres, namely melodrama. Melodrama is pure cinema: Films marked by excess in both mise-en-scène and affect, an intricate relationship between form and emotional content, and between personal drama and social-political forces. The course combines close analyses of a wide variety of films (classical Hollywood melodramas, international melodrama traditions from India to Mexico, contemporary film and TV dramas) with secondary readings on the ideological functions of narrative cinema; feminism, gender and genre; national and transnational cinema; spectatorship; and authorship.

CMPL 251 familiarizes students with the theory and practice of comparative literature as it introduces students to the broader practices and methods of literary theory. Against a background of classical poetics and rhetoric, CMPL 251 explores various modern literary theories, including Russian formalism, the Frankfurt School, feminism, psychoanalysis, the Black Arts Movement, deconstruction, new historicism, the critical philosophy of race, and others. This course takes an historical approach to literary theory, with a focus on the questions that define the field of aesthetics: What is a work of art? What social functions does it play? What are the sources of an artwork and how does it influence its audiences? We will read works by Plato, Aristotle, Kant, Marx, Freud, Du Bois, Foucault, Derrida, Judith Butler, Gloria Anzaldúa, and Toni Morrison, among others, as well as selected literary texts against which to measure the theorists. Students will write multiple response papers demonstrating their grasp of the subject matter, and two 5-page essays. A final exam is required.

This course aims at an understanding of the history and theory of tragedy as a distinctive literary genre and a more general literary and cultural problem. Equal attention will be paid to the continued treatment of common themes, both Classical and Biblical, and to the unique manifestation of the tragic at specific historical periods. Authors read include Aeschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides; the Bible¿s Books of Samuel; Racine and Shakespeare; Thomas Mann and William Faulkner. We will also explore some of the theories of tragedy set forth by thinkers such as Aristotle, Hegel, Nietzsche, Freud, and Walter Benjamin.

Designed as an introduction to genre of epic poetry, this course surveys readings (all in modern English translations) that represent the very foundations of Western literature, thought, and spirituality: the Homeric Greek epic known as the Iliad, Virgil's Latin epic, the Aeneid, selections from the Bible, the Sumerian Epic of Gilgamesh, the Old English epic known as Beowulf, and selections from several other works that reference the epic tradition. Our course is cross-listed and, as a course in Comparative Literature, we focus on defining the epic genre and understanding the formal qualities of epic poetry; as a course in the Peace, War, and Defense Curriculum, we focus on the historical influences exerted by ancient epics in matters of war and peace, the rise and fall of empires, imperial ambition, and related issues of defense and diplomacy. The course is co-taught with the former British Ambassador to the U.S., Sir Christopher Meyer, who will Skype in from London and join us for a visit during the semester.

This seminar allows comparative literature majors to work on an independent project that synthesizes their curricular experience, and it introduces them to current, broadly applicable issues in comparative literature. Our weekly discussions in this seminar will revolve around the relationship between film, literature, and other artistic media. In consultation with the professor, students will devise a semester-long independent research project, culminating with a revised 15-page paper at the semester¿s end. Students will also share their research with classmates in the form of two scholarly presentations.

When the medical anthropologist Arthur Kleinman writes that illness has meaning, he reminds us that the human experience of being sick involves more than just an ailing body. In this course we will analyze a diverse collection of writers who have taken as their topic the human struggle to make sense of suffering and debility. The course is divided into five units that will allow us to explore the personal, ethical, cultural, spiritual, and political facets of illness. Central texts will include Anne Fadiman's The Spirit Catches You and You Fall Down, Alan Shapiro's Vigil, and Damon Tweedy¿s Black Man in a White Coat: A Doctor¿s Reflections on Race and Medicine. Additional authors will include Rita Charon, Atul Gawande, Paul Kalanithi, Audre Lorde, Rebecca Skloot and Susan Sontag. Students will post to a discussion forum, write short essays, and create a final project that researches an illness or disability. Reading, Writing, and Discussion heavy!
Prerequisites & Course Attributes:
*First-year students only.

*Counts toward the Minor in Medicine, Literature and Culture.

The Entrepreneurial Spirit in Early English Literature

In 1593, the playwright, Christopher Marlowe, supposedly said that ¿he had as good a right to [make] coin as the Queen of England,¿ and that he was going to produce ¿French crowns, pistolets, and English shillings.¿ What did the writers of Renaissance England think about money and making money, and how did this influence their literary creativity? What did they say about the economy that was emerging around them, which today we call ¿capitalism¿? And how did they carve out a place for themselves in that marketplace? In this course, we will go back to the origins of our own market-world. In the literature of the time,

The Digital Humanities (DH) is a new and developing interdisciplinary field of inquiry that uses digital technologies to address the major questions that have always motivated the Humanities ¿ how people process and document the human experience. While many disciplines in the Humanities are now using the techniques and tools of DH, they are most prominently used in English, History, Rhetoric, Media Studies, and Cultural Studies.

In this class, we will focus on a single archival collection, the Federal Writers' Project Life Histories Collection, which documents everyday people's experiences during the Great Depression. We will complete three unit projects that each center a different genre used in the Digital Humanities: (1) digital story using Adobe Spark, (2) a conference paper detailing the results from an analysis of the metadata generated from the Life Histories collection, and (3) conference presentation.

What is Digital Humanities? Digital Humanities is an emerging interdisciplinary field that studies the intersections between humanities and data, in order to answer new types of research questions. This course will cover how humanities texts and information call us to revisit assumptions of qualitative and quantitative analyses. During the course of the semester, we will be collaborating with other existing Digital Humanities projects including the William Blake Archive, Duke¿s Migrations Lab, and the Federal Writer¿s Project. Students will then pursue their own research project using digital tools and resources.

This course (or ENGL 150) is required of English majors. Non-majors are welcome, but may find the content and focus more discipline-specific than in some other 100-level ENGL courses.

In this seminar focused on British literature from the 1790s to the 1930s, students learn methods of literary study and explore the challenges and rewards of approaching literary works in terms of broad historical and aesthetic categories like "Romantic," "Victorian" and "Modernist." This course will make you a stronger and more informed reader of British (and to some degree also American and Global Anglophone) literature written after 1800. After taking it, you¿ll be able to identify the literary period and origins even of texts you¿ve never seen before, based only on your knowledge of the literary movements we investigate here.

Course requirements include: multiple informal writing assignments, three formal essays (including one that you'll revise after getting feedback from the

Literatures of Climate Change and Extinction

This course introduces you to the study of literary genres through the thematic lens of climate change. We will trace how authors approach pressing environmental problems of our time and discuss the feasibility of the solutions they offer. Our central question is whether literature is an appropriate vehicle to communicate issues of climate change, loss of biodiversity, and extinction to mass audiences. Do to so, we will study our texts¿ essential formal and stylistic conventions and situate them within their broader scientific, historical, and political, and cultural contexts. Specifically, we will read some of the best prose fiction (short stories and novels) the genre has to offer and pay attention to how key literary concepts such as plot, point of view, character, and figurative language influence our vision of the world. We will further read environmental poetry, drama, and a graphic novel to do justice to the rich diversity of literary forms. This will allow us to think about how different textual forms shape the ways that people see, understand, and relate to their environment. Ultimately, this course allows you to develop the necessary skills for thinking, writing, and speaking critically about both

¿ENGL 128: Major American Authors ¿ Narrative Ethics and Empathy¿

With the following description¿

This course will engage short(er) works by major American authors in order to explore the relationship between narrative and moral values, and consider the question: ¿What does it mean to do the right thing?¿ We will consider the ways fiction, poetry, and film from the 19th and 20th centuries can foster empathy for others and inform our approach to ethics and lives as global citizens. We will focus particular attention on the intersections of race, class, religion, and politics. Active participation in discussion and weekly short responses will be required, in addition to a research paper and final exam.

In this course, we will attempt to understand the benefits and drawbacks of American individualism by considering works by major American authors from the 18th to the 20th century. We will be especially interested in how the concept of individualism has evolved over time--how authors of different time periods and literary movements imagined the tension between self and community in relation to social and historical realities. Along the way, we will also consider what makes an author major. Course requirements include weekly reading responses, two papers, and a final exam.

¿How Does it Feel to be a Problem?¿

This discussion-based class brings together a series of social texts -- literary, filmic, critical, historical, journalistic -- that respond to, comment upon, and struggle with key events in the history of ¿America.¿ The exploration of race, ethnicity, class, gender, sexuality, and nationality and how they are structured by institutions and social relations and informed by cultural beliefs will enables us to understand how we participate in and interact with these structures, how we are defined by them, how we create them, and how we can critique and change them. Graded work: 3 papers, two exams, and group oral presentations. Texts include: I, Tituba, Black Witch of Salem by Maryse Conde; Octavia Butler¿s Kindred; The Bluest Eye by Toni Morrison; Arab in America by Toufic El-Rassi; Memoir of a Race Traitor by Mab Segrest; articles by June Jordan, James Baldwin, and Allan Johnson; films such as The Muslims are Coming; Harvest of Empire: A History of Latinos in America, Little White Lie; and poems and music by Suheir Hammad, Rebel Diaz, and Cassandra Wilson, among others.

¿The landscape of your word is the world¿s landscape. But its frontier is open.¿
--Édouard Glissant, Poetics of Relation
¿Awareness of our situation must come before inner changes, which in turn come before changes in society. Nothing happens in the `real¿ world unless it first happens in the images in our heads.¿
--Gloria Anzaldúa, Borderlands/La Frontera

In a 2007 talk at UC Davis, Angela Davis asks, ¿How does change happen?¿ and answers, ¿When what seems unchangeable comes to be viewed as malleable.¿ But how does what seems unchangeable come to be viewed as malleable? In this course, we will excavate the way literature as an art of the imagination makes change--inner and social--possible. By proposing that literature is one of the tools with which we learn how to read the world, ourselves, and one another, we will ask how "cultural diversity" drives its power to transform our vision. To help us in this project, we will engage with American authors who confront

Literature and Cultural Diversity: Raza Studies Under Attack This Latinx studies course will examine the attempts to dismantle the Raza studies curriculum in Tucson, Arizona. We will begin by reading books from the Raza studies curriculum that address what it means to educate oppressed groups to help us think about what a quality education should look like. Next, we will contextualize the controversy surrounding the Raza studies curriculum in the Tucson Unified School District. To this end, we will investigate the connection between House Bill 2281, which, among other things, prohibits schools from having classes that ¿are designed primarily for pupils of a particular ethnic group¿ and ¿advocate ethnic solidarity,¿ and Senate Bill 1070, which states that ¿where reasonable suspicion exists that the person is an alien who is unlawfully present in the United States, a reasonable attempt shall be made, when practicable, to determine the immigration status of the person.¿ We will read articles and watch a documentary about the efforts to rid Tucson of its ethnic studies classes¿and particularly its Mexican American studies classes¿and the efforts to keep these courses in schools. We will conclude by reading more texts from the Raza studies curriculum, and we will put these texts in conversation with the charges leveled against the program and our discussions about the role an educational system should have.

Eighteenth-Century Transatlantic Literature

This course offers an introduction to transatlantic literature of the long eighteenth century. The eighteenth-century Atlantic world was characterized by the movement of people, commodities, and ideas between the societies of Europe, the Americas, and Africa. We will read a variety of literary texts, including travel narratives, slave narratives, novels, and poems, that represent the movement of people across and around the Atlantic basin and the cultural, ideological, and economic exchange that occurred as a result. Paying close attention to the genres and rhetorical strategies employed by writers, we will explore the role of literature in shaping ideas about race, slavery, religion, revolution, and gender and sexuality. We will also consider how the concept of transatlanticism challenges a nation-based approach to understandings of community and identity and to the study of literature. Texts may include Mary Rowlandson¿s The Sovereignty and Goodness of God, Aphra Behn¿s Oroonoko, Daniel Defoe¿s Moll Flanders, Olaudah Equiano¿s The Interesting Narrative of the Life of Olaudah Equiano, and Mary Prince¿s The History of Mary Prince.

This course is largely a study of perceptions and perspectives. It will examine first the well-documented European views of Native Americans presented in historical accounts and on artists' canvases, views which tell us as much about Europeans as they do about Natives. Then it will sample the explosion of perspectives presented by Native American novelists, poets, short story writers, and film makers whose voices, having been ignored for centuries, eloquently provide alternative views of themselves and of America. Because art is not produced in a vacuum, the course will also explore political, social, and cultural issues which have influenced each group's perception of the other.

ENGL 132H.001 | Honors: Intro to Fiction Writing
TR, 11:00-12:15.Enrollment = 15.
Writing intensive. Early short assignments emphasize elements of dramatic scene with subsequent written practice in point-of-view, dialogue, characterization, and refinement of style. Assigned short stories from textbook with in-depth analysis of technique, craft, and literary merit. Students will write and revise two full stories which will be duplicated for all class members and criticized by instructor and class. The short stories will be approximately 10-15 pages long. Revision in lieu of final exam. The course is informal but stringent; students may be asked to write each class meeting. Vigorous class participation in workshop is expected. Required texts: This course (or ENGL 130) serves as a prerequisite for other courses in the fiction sequence of the creative writing program (ENGL 206, 406, 693H). Textbook: Seagull Reader, W. W. Norton.

ENGL 133H.001 | Honors: Intro to Poetry Writing
TR, 11:00-12:15.
This course will explore the many pleasures and challenges of writing good poetry. Our focus will be the regular writing and revising of your original poems, and the in-class workshopping of some of these poems, but we will also spend much time reading and discussing exemplary poems from the past and present, mastering poetic terms and forms and techniques, listening to poems read aloud, and whatever else will help you become a better poet. Among the course requirements: several textbooks, to be read and discussed and mastered; a midterm exam and a final "term poem"; other written exercises; a memorization and recitation assignment; and (most important of all) your writing of up to ten original poems, and your ongoing revisions of those poems. This is a fun and informative class that will help you think and write more clearly, more exactly, and more imaginatively.

There is not one easy, digestible, back-of-the-jacket way to describe Creative Nonfiction. The term is at once incredibly accurate and very vague, which is perhaps befitting for the only genre of writing that has a negation in its title. We will read and produce work that is inventive, imaginative and artistic in its use of language, structure, and form. I.e. Creative. And we will also read and produce work that stays factually, if not spiritually, true to our actual experience and processing of the world. I.e. Nonfiction. Finally, we¿ll be discussing the limitations and possibilities of the genre throughout the semester and what forms it might take: essay; personal essay; memoir; literary journalism; portraiture; science and nature writing; travel writing; cultural criticism; ekphrasis; and the lyric essay.

American Cinema to 1960

From early experiments by Eadweard Muybridge and W.K.L. Dickson to the formation of the Hollywood studio system in the late 1910s to the development of sound film, Technicolor, and Cinemascope, the first seventy years of the American cinema was characterized by technological innovation, aesthetic advances, and cultural domination. And yet, the cinema also captivated individuals and groups at the margins of American society, who found in the movies a medium that seemed tailor-made for telling their stories. In this survey of American cinema from its beginnings in the late 19th century through the rise and fall of Classical Hollywood Cinema in the 20th century, we will explore how the medium became a mass art form, and a site for cultural critique, social reform, and political resistance. As we move chronologically through the first seven decades of American cinema, we will consider an array of topics, including gender and sexuality (Rudolph Valentino, Marlene Dietrich); race and ethnicity (Sessue Hayakawa, Oscar Micheaux); avant-garde and amateur cinema (Maya Deren, James Sibley Watson); and transnational and global identities (Edmundo and Felix Padilla, John Huston).

¿Film and Culture¿ will examine the ways in which culture and history shape and are shaped by motion pictures. In this course, we will juxtapose classic Hollywood cinema with avant-garde filmmaking to discuss the theme of duality in American culture through its influences on the TV series Twin Peaks (both the 1990s original and the new 2017 revival). We will explore how the show references and reframes a series of dualities present in American history and contemporary culture: the concept of the American dream against the social realities with which it clashes, the male gaze in classical cinema and its feminist reaction, the genres of film noir, the aesthetics of surrealism, and the figure of the double. Films would include Sunset Boulevard, All About Eve, The Wizard of Oz, Vertigo, Rebel Without a Cause, Laura as well as the experimental work of Maya Deren, David Lynch, Luis Buñuel and Laura Mulvey alongside episodes from the series. By playing the classical against the experimental, this course encourages students to reexamine what is ¿normal,¿ as well to question how the movie screen both influences and reflects audiences' views about gender, history and identity.

Popular Genres: Genre Evolution

On the one hand, this class is about aliens and monsters and superheroes and detectives and talking animals. On the other hand, this class is about literary history, literary evolution, and the relationship between text and reader. In other words, this class is about some of the most enduringly popular fictional genres. In particular, we will be focusing on five genres or categories of popular literature: detective fiction, science fiction/fantasy, graphic novels, horror, and children¿s literature. We will trace the history of each of these genres, in some cases reaching all the way back to the mid-19th century, and generally ending up near the present. Along the way, we will ask questions such as: How do certain genres establish themselves? Why do certain types of stories become popular? How do these genres evolve across decades, across different national literatures, from author to author? How do authors situate themselves and their works in relation to existing genres? Can authors bend, break, or change the rules of the genres they work within? How do race, gender, and national identity play a role in these genres? These works are all fun to read, but we will also be taking them seriously both as works of art in their ¿Mystery Fiction¿ (ENGL 147) surveys the prose genre of modern mystery fiction. The course introduces students to significant literary works, movements, publishing trends, and debates that stimulated the development and popularity of 19th century mystery fiction and have carried the genre through its postmodern/contemporary iterations. Readings include works by Edgar Allan Poe, Arthur Conan Doyle, Agatha Christie, Raymond Chandler, Dashiell Hammett, Thomas Pynchon, Paul Auster, Walter Mosley and Michael Chabon. Students will gain proficiency in the analysis and discussion of literary works, analysis of rare books, and related critical materials. The course also offers to students an opportunity to engage topics that have recently appeared at the interface between traditional print and emergent digital media cultures. Topic areas related to the latter include the history of mystery-specific periodicals and mass-market publishing, how the visual aesthetics of the digital book have re-shaped genre fiction, how literary works circulate in a digital marketplace, and how new media afford new opportunities for digital literary scholarship (digital curation, digital research methods and digital archives).

Seminar in literary studies considering literature in relation to film and film¿s visual and aural (sight and sound) components. Mexicans and Mexican Americans have figured prominently as types of criminality, victim victimizer, and evil in Anglo-American film noir culture even though some of those films complicate and question this characterization of Mexicans and Mexican Americans. One need only think of films such as Edwin L. Marin¿s Nocturne (1946), Fritz Lang¿s The Secret Beyond the Door (1948), John Farrow¿s Where Danger Lives (1950), Phil Karlson¿s Kansas City Confidential (1952), Orson Welles¿s A Touch of Evil (1958), Alfred Hitchcock¿s Vertigo (1958), Leonard Kastle¿s The Honeymoon Killers (1969), or neo-noirs such as Ridley Scott¿s Blade Runner (1982), Curtis Hanson¿s L.A. Confidential (1997) based on a James Ellroy novel, and David Lynch¿s Mulholland Drive (2001). This course examines the way in which Chicana/o literature intervenes in and against U.S. film noir classic stereotypes of Mexican Americans and repurposes the conventions of U.S. film noir to its own ends. Required reading: María DeGuzmán¿s Buenas Noches, American Culture: Latina/o Aesthetics of Night, Américo Paredes¿s The Shadow (1950s/1998), Oscar ¿Zeta¿ Acosta¿s Autobiography of a Brown Buffalo (1972), Margarita Cota-Cárdenas¿s Puppet (1985, 2000), Cecile Pineda¿s Face (1985, republished in 2003), Lucha Corpi¿s Eulogy for a Brown Angel (1992), Manuel Ramos¿s Desperado: A Mile High Noir (2013), Carla Trujillo¿s What Night Brings Folklorists seek to understand how people interpret and make sense of the world. In this course we will look at diverse forms (or "genres") of folklore, including song, architecture, legend, and food. We will consider how vernacular expressive culture is learned, what it does for people, and why these processes and products persist through time and space. Students will be introduced to the discipline of Folklore's central research methodology, ethnography, and have an opportunity to practice that approach in individual and group research projects.

Students enrolling in 202-001 are also required to enroll in one recitation section numbered 202-601 through 202-604.

This course is cross-listed with FOLK 202-001 and ANTH 202-001.

When literary historians describe the theater of the late sixteenth and early seventeenth centuries, they invariably describe their work as about drama ¿in the age of Shakespeare.¿ I doubt that even Shakespeare imagined himself as writing in the age of Shakespeare. And although he cast a wide shadow, contemporary playwrights found plenty of daylight for their own theatrical inventions. We will be looking at many of the playwrights who were quite happy not being Shakespeare or Shakespearean, including Marlowe, Kyd, Dekker, Heywood, Tourneur, Middleton, Jonson, Chapman, Ford, and Shirley. Together they created a drama much wider and more diverse than anything Shakespearean. We will approach these texts as examples of both aesthetic experimentation and cultural exploration, as investigations of economic and social change, of religious and philosophical debate, and of political engagement.

Teaching method: Mostly discussion with occasional pontification.

Requirements: Weekly quizzes and journal entries, two critical papers, and a final examination.

John Milton was a religious dissident, a political theorist, and a poet. He wrote at a time in English history when concepts of government and authority were in the process of active and militant critique, when religious, domestic and civil spheres were being reimagined and reformulated. We will study Milton's writings within this highly charged political environment, as political theory, as religious dissension, as social history, and as poetry. Students will be asked to consider Milton's poetry and prose accounts culturally, in terms of the material circumstances of their writing. Teaching methods: Classtime will be spent in lecture and group discussion of pertinent texts.

Requirements: Weekly writing assignments; two papers (8-10 pages); final exam.

Texts: Hughes Merritt, ed. John Milton: Complete Poems and Major Prose. New York: MacMillan, 1957.

What is literature for? What can it do? Can it change your life? Can it change the world? To answer these questions and others, this course will introduce the major developments in literary criticism and theory from the late 19th century to the present. Rather than studying these developments as separate movements, however, the course will investigate their complex relationships, paying particular attention to the ways in which methods for interpreting texts become prescriptions for how to live. Through a combination of primary theoretical essays and select literary texts and films, we will cover such topics as psychoanalysis, Marxism, structuralism, poststructuralism, critical race theory, gender and sexuality studies, and postcolonialism.

This interdisciplinary, team-taught course joins literary and anthropological analysis to examine how cultural symbols, values, and social structures become represented in people¿s experiences of illness and healing. Literary analyses focus on writing as composed of genres and diverse media; the role of voice, perspective, and register. Ethnography presents fieldworkers¿ accounts of studying everyday life, from interpersonal relations to institutional interactions. Readings will include the poetic illness narrative /The Diving Bell and the Butterfly/, the dark television comedy /A Young Doctor's Notebook/ (starring Daniel Radcliffe and Jon Hamm as the same character), the graphic memoir /Our Cancer Year,/ and the film /Truman/ about facing the end of life. This class, which counts for credit towards both the Literature, Medicine, and Culture (LMC) Honors Minor, and the Minor in Medical Anthropology, will involve substantive discussions about texts, societies, and methodologies, and meta-discussions about the promises of combing literature and ethnography for understanding health and healing.

#BLACKLIVESMATTER AND THE NEW HUMANISM

In the fall of 2015, U.S. college campuses were stoked by fires ignited in the streets of Ferguson, Missouri, after the wrongful death of 18-year-old Michael Brown at the hands of police.
American students had certainly not been quiescent in the years before this event: the abusive, so-called "officer-involved" deaths of Sandra Bland, Eric Garner, Walter Scott, and, of course, 12-year-old Tamir Rice, had also given rise to student protests that disrupted "business as usual" in the streets, halls of justice, and political campaign rallies that dotted the American landscape. The death of young Tamir, who was shot twice (once in the abdomen) by Cleveland police officer Timothy Loehmann a scant two seconds after the officer and his colleague, Officer Frank Garmback, arrived, had been playing with a toy gun at a playground near his home. What made Officer Loehmann fatally shoot this child without hesitating? Why is it that Tamir's life, in addition to the lives of scores of other African

How do we define children's literature and what function does it serve? Why should we still care about it after we are adults? What different understandings of what constitutes childhood have different historical periods held? What do we mean by childhood now? In what ways does children's literature point to our basic assumptions about meaning, culture, self, society, gender, economics? This course surveys the tradition of children's literature in order to consider such questions. We read key texts from that tradition¿some still highly visible; others that have seemed to vanish. The organizing idea of the course is that children's literature is a vital and important key to culture. Unlocking its language gives us a way to read history and our own meaning within it.

Readings include Aesop¿s Fables, fairy tales and nursery rhymes, Alice¿s Adventures in Wonderland (1865) and Through the Looking Glass (1871), Little Women (1868-69). The Wonderful Wizard of Oz (1900),Peter and Wendy (1911),The Wind in the Willows (1908), The Brownies Book (1919-1920), Unsung Heroes (1921) Winnie the Pooh (1926) and The House at Pooh Corner (1928),The Hobbit (1937), and Harry Potter and the Sorcerer's Stone (1997).

In this class, we will examine the ways that business communication is shifting in response to twenty-first century writing opportunities. We will study and practice online writing in multiple genres and formats. We will also study and develop materials--both online and for print--that can be used to promote an endeavor or individual. And we will learn to create a number of traditional business genres with an eye on how their formats, audiences, and purposes are shifting.

Ever wonder why certain posts come in your Facebook feed or how songs get classified in your i-tunes? These seemingly every day technological occurrences have a profound effect on how we understand the world. In this class, we will explore exactly how data is constructed and used to shape technology, such as social media sites, archives, and visualizations. In order to analyze these topics, we will work with different technologies to actually create and visualize data for ourselves. However, no previous technological experience is necessary. In constructing our own data, we will learn how the process requires significant interpretation, consideration of the audience and users, together with attention to arrangement and outcome, making it a highly rhetorical act.

ENGL 337H.001 | The Romantic Revolution in the Arts
M, 03:35-06:25. Instructor(s): Joseph Viscomi. Enrollment = 18.
This interdisciplinary course examines the technical and aesthetic revolutions in the fine arts of the English Romantic Period. It will discuss productions, experiments, and aesthetic theories of William Wordsworth, S. T. Coleridge, J. M. W. Turner, and William Blake, focusing on the developments of lyrical poetry, landscape painting, and original printmaking. We will pay special attention to the period's new ideas about nature, the sublime, picturesque travel, genius, originality, and social role of the artist. There will be a studio workshop in drawing landscapes in pen and ink according to 18th-century techniques and formulae and a workshop in printing facsimile plates from Blake¿s Songs of Innocence and of Experience. Knowledge of printmaking and painting is not required.

We read important novels of nineteenth-century Britain, including novels widely popular at the time. These novels, filled with sensational elements (including images of monsters and outsiders), still have a significant afterlife today. We concentrate on the form of the novel in relation to the cultural meaning of these books in their own times and given their sustained cultural presence now. What is the relation between the genre of the novel and social possibilities? Readings include: Frankenstein (1818), Northanger Abbey (1818), A Christmas Carol (1843), Jane Eyre (1847), Wuthering Heights (1847), ¿The Lifted Veil¿ (1859), Lady Audley¿s Secret (1862), Alice in Wonderland and Through the Looking Glass (1865 & 1871), Sherlock Holmes Stories (1881-1914), Jekyll and Hyde (1886), and The Picture of Dorian Gray (1891). Satisfies core genre requirement in the new English major.

Selected topics or authors in American literature in the twentieth century. In this case ¿topics¿ are the large twentieth century literary and theoretical movements called modernism and postmodernism. The course examines an interesting variety of canonical American writers representing modernism and postmodernism from the post-World War II period to the end of the twentieth century. Among the writers are modernist writers William Faulkner, Marianne Moore, T. S. Eliot, William Carlos Williams, and Robert Frost, and among the postmodernists are Thomas Pynchon, John Edgar Wideman, Toni Morrison, and Maxine Hong Kingston.

This course introduces you to the variety of American fiction, from the late eighteenth through the early twentieth century. Beginning with one of the earliest American novels, Charles Brockden Brown's gothic fiction, Wieland (1798), we move on to Hawthorne¿s profound examination of guilt and redemption, The Blithedale Romance (1850); Harriet Beecher Stowe's Uncle Tom's Cabin (1852), instrumental in galvanizing opposition to slavery; and Moby-Dick (1851), Melville's masterpiece considered by some the great American novel. We then turn to Realist fiction and The Damnation of Theron Ware (1896), Harold Frederic¿s scathing portrait of a fallen minister, and end with William Faulkner¿s modernist experiment, Light in August (1932).

This course will examine canonical and non-canonical American novels written in various ¿popular¿ genres, from the nineteenth century to today. Our survey will range from hardboiled detective fiction, westerns, and sci-fi to racial passing narratives, travel-adventure/horror, graphic novels, and more. In addition to exploring the historical contexts and defining characteristics of these genres, we also will consider the ways in which race, gender, and class inform both past and present conceptions of the ¿popular.¿

Religious Experience in Early African-American Literature

This course is an examination of early African-American literature as it documents the religious experiences and contributions of these writers and artists to larger American spiritual discourse, both before and immediately after Emancipation. A good way to understand our approach is to consider the questions we might ask over the course of the semester: Do slave autobiographies and testimonies suggest that there is such a thing as a distinct African-American religious experience? How does a systematic black theology emerge in early African-American cultural production? How might a broader understanding of ¿literary text¿¿expanding our source material to include songs, oral histories, and archival records¿reshape our answers to these questions? In pursuit of our course inquiry, we will mine a variety of texts, including Muslim and Christian slave narratives, Negro spirituals and slave songs, epic poetry, and church and abolitionist archives. This reading-intensive course will require a rigorous engagement with a range of primary and secondary source materials, and the bravery to contribute to challenging conversations about the relationship between systematic oppression, historical atrocity, and religious belief.

This is a course for anyone considering a career in teaching English/Language Arts. The focus of the class will be an examination of the pedagogical methods for teaching academic writing. Students will design curricular models, practice instruction, and develop lesson plans focused on both traditional genres of writing and "digital literacy." Students will also receive training with the Adobe Suite of software. The course will further offer students the opportunity to reflect on the curricular, political, and instructional questions related to public/private (and now online) schooling in the US. Students in ENGL 400 will produce both digital and traditional writing assignments as we study rhetorical theories and strategies for the teaching of writing.

When John Grierson defined the documentary as the "creative treatment of actuality," in 1926, he was thinking only of film. But the documentary mode has long been utilized across media, from the late 19th century advocacy journalism of Jacob Riis to Craig Gilbert's 1973 reality television series An American Family to the selfies that circulate on social media. In this class, we will consider the persistence and pervasiveness of the documentary mode in the past century and a half. By surveying key developments in documentary film, and its historical, theoretical, and ethical implications, we will lay the groundwork for thinking critically about non-fiction media in its current and past forms.

Victorian Afterlives
In this course we'll explore the questions of why and how modern novelists write back to Victorian fiction by reading Charlotte Bronte's JANE EYRE and Charles Dickens's GREAT EXPECTATIONS alongside modern sequels, prequels, and spin-offs. We'll conclude the semester by considering two neo-Victorian novels by A.S. Byatt and Margaret Atwood, POSSESSION and ALIAS GRACE. We'll also consider recent film adaptations of the novels. How does returning to the nineteenth-century texts help 20-th and 21st-century novelists address our own cultural preoccupations?

Mapping Black Arts Movements: Aesthetics, Power & Literature

The objective of this course is to explore the Black Arts Movement (BAM) as a local and global phenomenon. We will study African American literature as it responds to music, visual art, theater, history and politics. This course also engages the relationships between literature and ancestry, Black nationalism, identity, aesthetics, gender, sexuality, and politics. We will consider why the performance arts were crucial to the development and the legacy of BAM. Special emphasis will be placed on women authors, artists and activists. Texts will include: We Wanted a Revolution: Black Radical Women, 1965-85: A Sourcebook; John Bracey, Sonia Sanchez, James Smethurst, SOS: The Black Arts Movement Reader, June Jordan, Who Look at Me,and books from Dudley Randall¿s Broadside Press.

In this course we will learn to read Old English, the vernacular Germanic language spoken by the Anglo-Saxons in Britain from about the middle of the fifth century until the time of the Norman Conquest. Our primary texts will include Beowulf, The Battle of Brunanburh, Caedmon¿s Hymn, The Seafarer, biblical excerpts, and selections from the writings of King Alfred the Great and Aelfric. We will note in passing the influence these texts exerted on writers such as Milton, Gerard Manley Hopkins, Ezra Pound, J.R.R. Tolkien, and Seamus Heaney. And, in order to place these literary works into a broader cultural and historical context, we will briefly explore the history and material culture of the Anglo-Saxon era by studying Tacitus, Bede, and objects ranging from the treasures discovered at the Sutton Hoo ship-burial site to the richly illuminated Lindisfarne Gospels.

Aging and Mental Health

In this course, students will develop research methods including ethnography, archival research, and oral history. We will begin by focusing on the topic of aging. Students will participate in Interprofessional Education (IPE) activities as ethnographers, observing how faculty and students from various health disciplines at UNC approach problems related to aging. In this part of the course, we will study ethnographic methods as well as various disciplinary approaches to aging (from Occupational Health, medicine, anthropology, etc.). Students will then produce an ethnographic report based on this experience.

In the second part of the course, we will turn to the topic of mental health. Students will participate in a public health humanities project to develop public materials for the site of the Dorothea Dix Hospital, Carolina¿s first public mental institution, which is now being re-envisioned as a public park in Raleigh. Students will conduct archival research in order to contextualize the history of the site, to study mental health treatment in the 1850s and

Making/Rhetoric

Rhetoric has always been thought of as a techne, a ¿process of producing or bringing-forth¿ that encompasses knowledge, talent, and skill. Anthropologist Tim Ingold argues that techne involve an ¿art of inquiry¿ that includes ¿practical and observational engagements with the things around us¿ (6). While Ingold argues for a techne-based way of doing anthropology, scholars in rhetoric have yet to fully explore what such an approach would mean for the way we study rhetoric and its history. In this course, we will examine what it means to practice rhetoric and writing as a techne and to enact that practice alongside other forms of making. We will focus, in particular, on how non-Western rhetorical practices offer alternative ways of understanding rhetoric as a techne. For one, many rhetorical terms have their roots in other forms of making--to take just a couple of examples, the term kairos (right timing) shares its etymology with the art of weaving, and rhetorical style was understood with relation to embroidery. Our investigations will range from ancient Mesopotamian cylinder seals¿pictographic objects used to ¿sign¿ one¿s name on clay tablets¿to Sumerian cuneiform writing, to Mesoamerican codices and

Studies in Renaissance Authors/Shakespeare's Digital World

Shakespeare lived and wrote in early modern London, an analog city if there ever was one, filled with continuously changing sights and sounds. His social world was dynamic, too, even volatile. Today, more and more, it¿s digital media that are providing us with the tools to recreate this world, and to understand Shakespeare and his works better. In this course, we will investigate Shakespeare by means of these tools, learning how to use them, and, at the same time, testing these tools against his works. That is, we will be interested not only in digital praxis, but in its developing implications for early modern scholarship, for research and reading. There will be three main avenues. First, London¿s physical and social surroundings. We will consult the online ¿Map of Early Modern London,¿ for instance, to locate plays such as Hamlet and A Midsummer Night¿s Dream in their cityscape, and the website, ¿Early British Ballad Archive,¿ to tune into the city¿s sonic environment. Second, we will explore text analysis, using, for example, online tools to compare Shakespeare¿s works with other texts published in England at the time. Third, we will trace out early modern social networks, including Shakespeare¿s, using ¿Six Degrees

Seminar on Romanticism in England
¿You are my creator, but I am your master. Obey!¿ This ultimatum to scientist Victor Frankenstein from his unnamed Creature has chilled readers, audiences, and trick-or-treaters since Mary Shelley published Frankenstein in 1818. Members of this graduate seminar will reflect on her novel¿s generic hybridity, historicize it amidst contemporaneous events, and identify reasons for its 200-year reign in the Western imagination. Readings include selections from Mary Shelley¿s larger oeuvre (her prescient treatment of an Earth approaching uninhabitability in The Last Man and her disquieting candor about sexual trauma in Mathilda and Valperga); a few adaptations of Frankenstein; and essays on adaptation theory.

The assignments are designed to strengthen the students¿ professional development as well as to deepen knowledge of the material. They include: short weekly papers (1-2 pages) responding to the assigned readings; one scholarly paper of 15 pages, presented orally to the class and in writing to the instructor, with a plan for submitting it for publication; and a lesson plan for teaching one aspect of Frankenstein, workshopped with the class.

Literary Historicism and the Contemporary American Novel

This course examines the major approaches to literary historicism in a study of the contemporary American novel. Designed principally as an introduction to the theoretical issues involved in bringing historical events into literary analysis, the course will begin with primary theoretical texts¿Friedrich Nietzsche, Sigmund Freud, Karl Marx, Walter Benjamin, and Michel Foucault¿and move on to survey the prevailing modes of literary historicism. Students will be asked to consider select (brief) readings from the new historicism, cultural materialism, thing theory, the study of the everyday, and media archaeology, and to bring their own primary historical research to bear in our literary analyses. We will read novels by Rivka Galchen, Jonathan Lethem, Lorrie Moore, Toni Morrison, Viet Thanh Nguyen, and Colson Whitehead to consider whether literary portrayals of the end¿of life, psychological coherence, the planet, connection to birth origins¿defy historical analysis. Having arrived at the end, we will ask, is mourning possible? Or is the contemporary doomed to obsessive repetition? What does it mean to think about the history of a form defined by its relation to the present? How shall we think about the ¿new¿

WAIT LISTING FOR SPRING 2018 HONORS COURSES HAS BEEN SUSPENDED. WAIT LISTS WILL BE PURGED ON FRIDAY, JANUARY 5. BEGINNING MONDAY, JANUARY 8, YOU MUST OBTAIN WRITTEN INSTRUCTOR PERMISSION FOR ANY HONORS COURSE YOU WISH TO JOIN. YOU ARE REQUIRED TO DELIVER A HARD-COPY OF THE PERMISSION NOTE TO THE HONORS CAROLINA OFFICE IN 225 GRAHAM MEMORIAL.

ECON 570H.001 | Economic Applications of Statistical Analysis
TR, 3:30-4:45. Instructor(s): Ju Hyun Kim. Enrollment = 24.
The honors section of ECON 570 explores some of our statistical concepts more deeply and apply them to more challenging problems. Creativity and critical thinking are necessary when deciding how to model and interpret statistics. The honors section is ideal for students preparing to write senior theses or preparing for postgraduate studies.

A major portion of the course is an empirical research project. Students are expected to formulate their own research question; transform it into a hypothesis that can be tested statistically; collect, clean, and categorize data; perform econometric analysis to test the hypothesis; and make inferences and draw conclusions from their results.

ENEC 325H.001 | Water Resource Management and Human Rights
MWF, 11:15-12:05. Instructor(s): Amy Cooke. Enrollment = 24.
Water supply is a critical component of food and energy production, good health and sanitation. Yet globally, access to clean water is still not assured, even within developed nations like the United States. Following the leadership of the UN Declaration of Human Rights, an increasing number of countries are adopting the position that access to water is a human right. What barriers to nations and individuals have to guaranteeing water access? Given the critical nature of water to good health and nearly all of human economic activity, what constraints do people have to negotiate globally to maintain sufficient stocks of this crucial resource for the earth¿s population?

This course examines these questions. To do this we will use a variety of mediums: film, books, scientific research, lectures and discussions. We will endeavor to not only outline the constraints to and conflict over this increasingly limited resource, but also suggest some paths towards sustainable water

WAIT LISTING FOR SPRING 2018 HONORS COURSES HAS BEEN SUSPENDED. WAIT LISTS WILL BE PURGED ON FRIDAY, JANUARY 5. BEGINNING MONDAY, JANUARY 8, YOU MUST OBTAIN WRITTEN INSTRUCTOR PERMISSION FOR ANY HONORS COURSE YOU WISH TO JOIN. YOU ARE REQUIRED TO DELIVER A HARD-COPY OF THE PERMISSION NOTE TO THE HONORS CAROLINA OFFICE IN 225 GRAHAM MEMORIAL.

Today, cities all over the world want to be smart, flexible and resilient. They are in need of smart city knowledge, expertise, consulting and support. This is a swiftly developing field, combining different sciences in a holistic fashion. This course follows on a course given spring 2015 and will focus after a thorough introduction on what the current status is on smart (sustainable) technologies, social impact and economical opportunities worldwide. We will work on integrated concepts for Smart Cities and ways to apply and scale them up.

GLBL 492H.001 | Global Food Films
TR, 02:00-03:15. Instructor(s): Inger Brodey. Enrollment = 24.
Few aspects of life evoke cultural belonging more than food. Food can define communities by establishing a connection between those who eat at the same table (or mat) and by separating a group from those who are not partaking of the same meal. Through food, cultures can reassert, refresh, challenge, and reform traditional assumptions about many aspects of life. Cultures often use food analogies to describe aspects of themselves, such as their homogeneity or heterogeneity: consider the ¿melting post¿ or ¿salad bowl¿ metaphors for the contemporary United States. The taste (and to a lesser extent appearance) of food is a principal means of evoking memories or a sense of nostalgia for a past time or culture¿memories that the other senses are less able to evoke. In such ways, food can both reflect and shape identity. Not only does food have strong emotional and cultural association, but it can also be a vehicle for societal and political individuation or change. It helps express national, cultural, tribal, and familial values or loyalties and also can be a vehicle for expressing both the power and the limits of transnationalism.
WAIT LISTING FOR SPRING 2018 HONORS COURSES HAS BEEN SUSPENDED. WAIT LISTS WILL BE PURGED ON FRIDAY, JANUARY 5. BEGINNING MONDAY, JANUARY 8, YOU MUST OBTAIN WRITTEN INSTRUCTOR PERMISSION FOR ANY HONORS COURSE YOU WISH TO JOIN. YOU ARE REQUIRED TO DELIVER A HARD-COPY OF THE PERMISSION NOTE TO THE HONORS CAROLINA OFFICE IN 225 GRAHAM MEMORIAL.

ABOUT THE SEMINAR:
This seminar deals in the broadest possible context with two critical issues that dominated the 20th century: the rise of fascism out of the carnage of World War I and the Bolshevik revolution to which the war and Czarist Russia's involvement in it helped contribute. As the semester unfolds, drawing on a

ABOUT THE SEMINAR:
This seminar addresses how encounters between Europe and the African Diaspora changed notions of race, nation, identity and belonging in the 20th century. From the jazz age to the present, Blackness has posed both an allure as well as a danger for Europeans, especially those who view Black culture as

Twentieth-Century Native America
The idea that American Indian communities would continue to exist in the year 2000 would have confounded late nineteenth-century federal policymakers. By that time, the Native population had collapsed, the tribal land base had been all but destroyed, and the allotment and assimilation juggernaut pledged to "Kill the Indian to Save the Man." At the dawn of the new millennium, however, it was the system of colonial administration - not the indigenous peoples subjected to it - that appeared anachronistic. Against terrible odds and in defiance of dominant expectations, Native communities endured. "Twentieth-Century Native America" explores this complex and fascinating story. Readings, lectures, and recitation sections will carry students across Native America from the late nineteenth to the early twenty-first centuries. Along the way, we will engage critically important issues, such as identity construction and contestation, the shifting meanings of sovereignty and citizenship, and the problems of blood and belonging.

This course is cross-listed with American Studies 235.
